compel in large measure.

And I know, Mr. McMahon, you said last time that you had postponed a trip to the kingdom essentially to learn what the rulings are. I do think this is the type of stage of the case where you or somebody on your behalf needs to sit down with the folks who are responding to these requests and hold their hand to a certain extent and describe in greater detail what needs to be searched for. It's somewhat inconsistent to say, we have developed this massive index and, yet, not produce documents that relate to the employment of some of these individuals, directives that they may have given or received and the like.

And I recognize that, as Mr. Carter pointed out, there is a significant disconnect between that which was requested and that which has been received. And I'm not so naive to think that perhaps it won't persist. I hope it doesn't. But if it does, I suppose that will lead to additional motion practice. And if the IIRO or any other defendant has failed to produce documents that manifestly are within its possession, custody, or control, that may lead to consequences that that particular defendant doesn't care for.

But I assume one stage, at least, between the receipt of whatever additional documents are produced and a further motion would be some depositions, including depositions of document custodians about the type of search that was or was SOUTHERN DISTRICT REPORTERS, P.C.
